

Q1 The primary challenge for parents today is their inability to say "no." This leads to them raising greedy children whose desires are never satiated, even after getting what they want.

Q2 Psychologists suggest that overindulged children face several negative consequences: They become more vulnerable to future anxiety and depression. They develop a tendency to always ask for more than they need because there is always more to want. They fail to understand the value and meaning of self-sacrifice.

Q4 By waiting for things, children learn crucial life lessons. These include the value of patience, the importance of saving money, and the understanding that they need to work hard to achieve their goals.

Q5 Advertisements are a major source of influence on children. They are often specifically created to target a child's mindset by showcasing lavish products. This exposure fuels a child's greed and creates a constant craving to want more and more.